

PACK-N-FOLD COLONIALISM CAMPAIGN FURNITURE AT BOSCOBEL

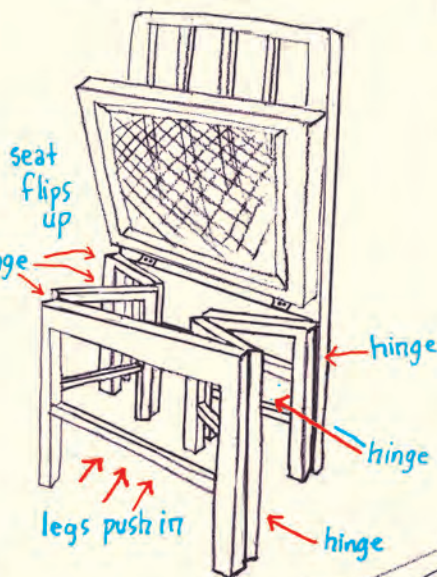

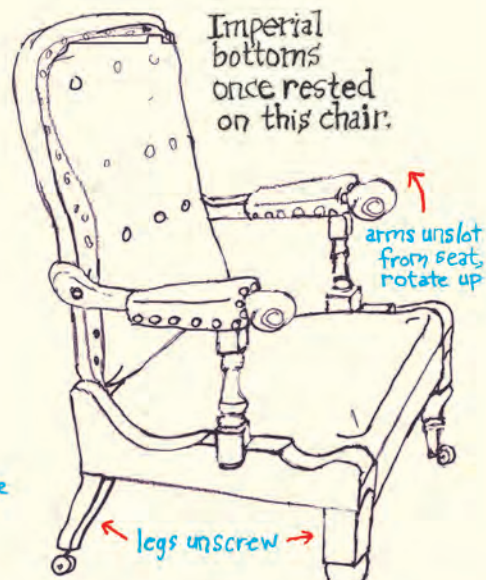

On Exhibit through November 4th

Since Roman times, warlike people have invented ways to pack up their furniture, march into their neighbors' country, and sit comfortably while they take it over.

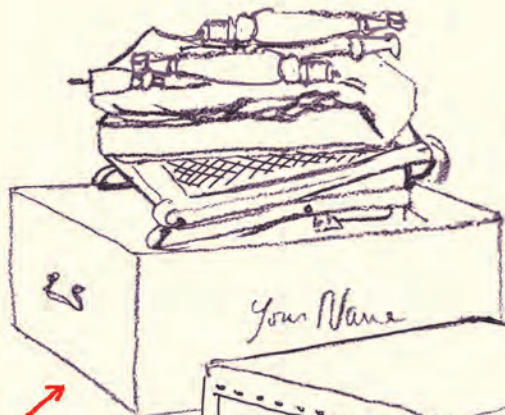

This tactic reached its peak from 1780 to 1880 under the British and other empires. The furniture design was faultless even if the politics behind it were not.

Anyone who has ever lived in a small space will covet much of what is on display.

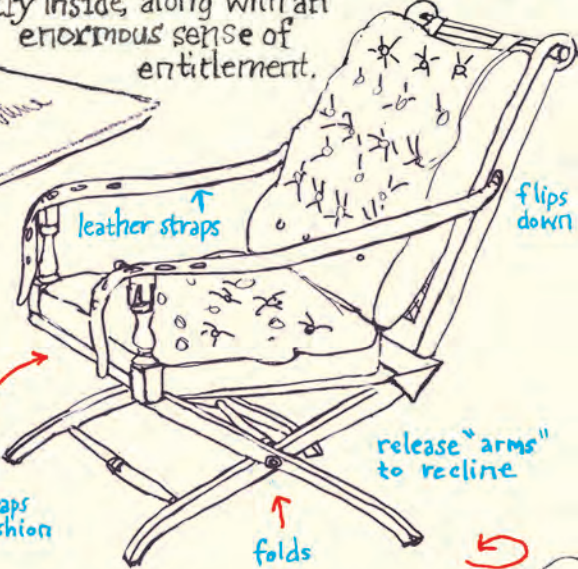

High-ranking rear ends could also choose the Douro armchair with matching table made from its own packing case. Both the chair and table legs fit tightly inside, along with an enormous sense of entitlement.

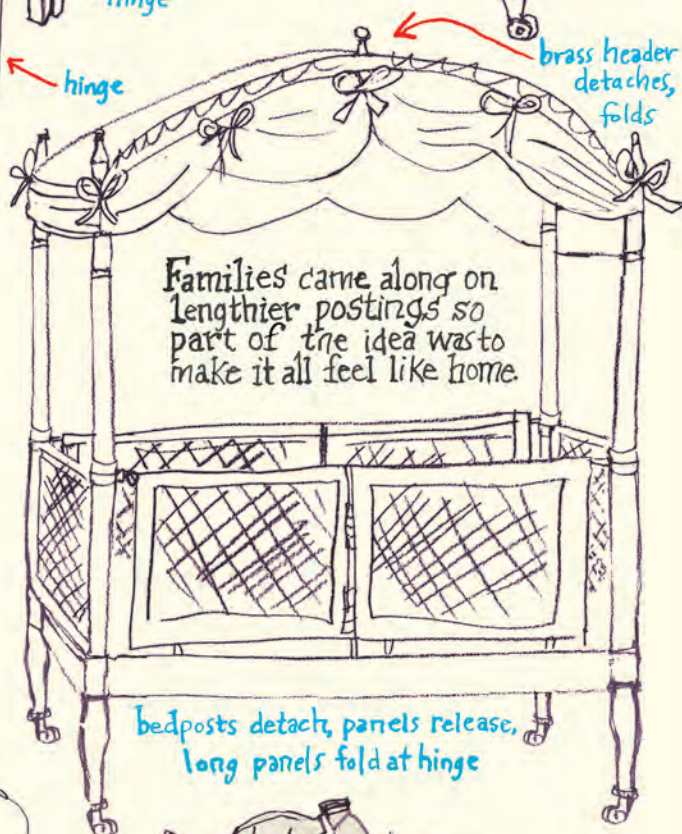

packing case with contents

drop-leaf support swivels

legs unscrew

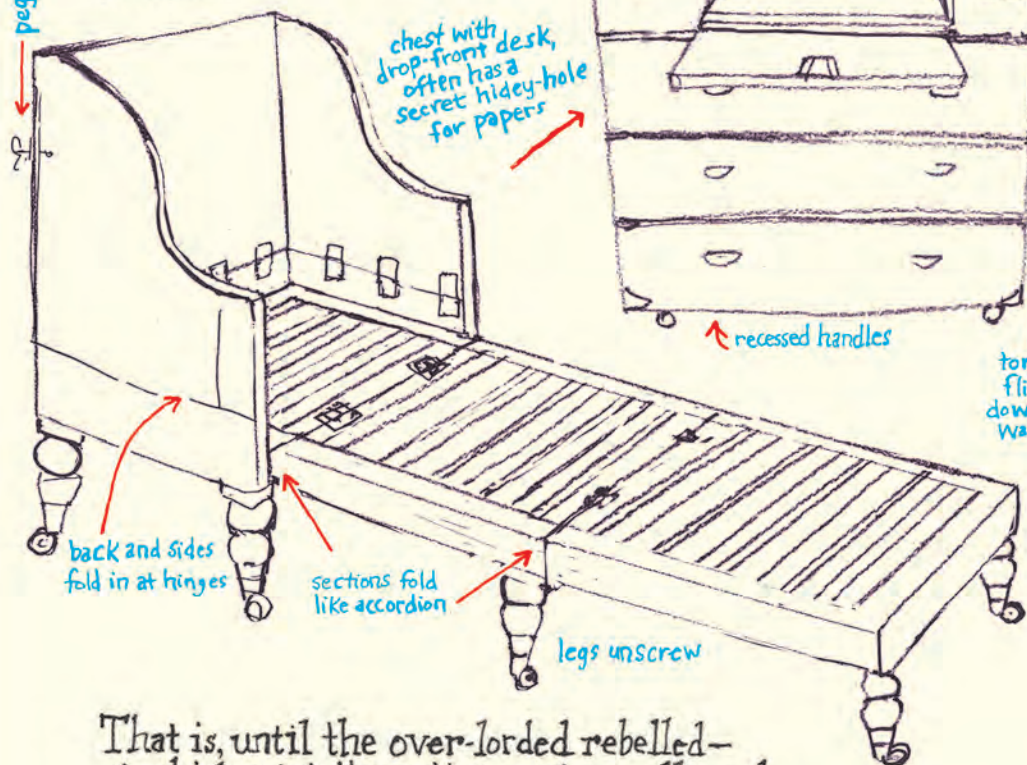

leather cushion hangs from rod

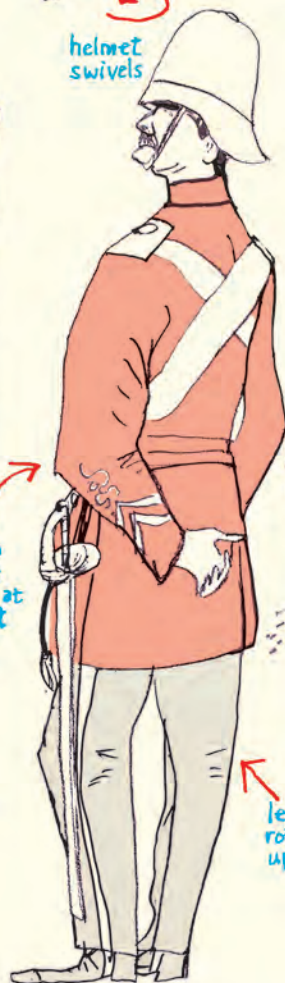

Obviously, life was glorious and romantic if one was on the side with the really cool furniture.

peg releases

helmet swivels

That is, until the over-lorded rebelled— at which point the entire system collapsed...

...and one was sent packing.