Beacon to Form Fishkill Avenue Committee

Group will study zoning, trails, streetscapes in northeast Beacon

By Jeff Simms

Beacon Mayor Lee Kyriacou plans to create a citizens’ committee to develop ideas and advise the City Council on, among other things, the potential rezoning of the Fishkill Avenue corridor.

The mayor said during the Monday (Nov. 27) council meeting that he hopes to name between nine and 11 members by next month. An application is available at beaconny.gov with a Dec. 15 deadline.

Kyriacou said he expects the committee will meet twice monthly for six to nine months. J.C. Calderon, an architect and former Planning Board member, will chair the group.

The committee can determine how it will receive community input, and the city said it will assist with timing and logistics.

In a statement that he read Monday, (Continued on Page 7)

Environmental concerns drive call for moratorium

By Leonard Sparks

Philipstown is moving to impose a six-month moratorium on projects storing more than 10,000 gallons of oil products as it considers zoning restrictions to protect the environment and drinking water supplies.

Members of the Town Board voted Nov. 22 to schedule a public hearing for Dec. 13 on a draft law declaring that applications for land uses that include storage of oil products will not be “accepted, processed or approved” for six months. The Town Board would be able to extend the moratorium for two additional six-month periods.

Philipstown’s zoning code restricts storage tanks and facilities of 400,000 gallons or greater in environmentally sensitive areas. Those areas include the Clove Creek Aquifer Subdistrict, which was created in 2011 and prohibits certain facilities, such as gas stations and landfills, and requires

New Meeting Rules in Cold Spring

Mayor cites threats, harassment

By Michael Turton

The Cold Spring Village Board on Wednesday (Nov. 29) approved policies to combat what Mayor Kathleen Foley described as harassment involving a “First Amendment activist.”

Foley said that, since June, the Village Board, Police Department and village staff have been subjected to harassment that has escalated in recent weeks.

Earlier this year Leonard Filipowski, who online sources list as a 59-year-old resident of Fishkill, filed a complaint with the village, alleging he had been abused by Cold Spring police officers when he was issued a traffic ticket and during a subsequent appearance in traffic court.

Governor signs round of bills passed by state legislators

By Chip Rowe

Through this week, Gov. Kathy Hochul had enacted 681 bills passed during the 2023-24 legislative session. Sixty-four bills await her signature and she has vetoed 46.

Below are summaries of select laws and the votes cast by Republican Rob Rolison (whose Senate district includes the Highlands), Democrat Dana Levenberg (whose Assembly district includes Philipstown) and Democrat Jonathan Jacobson (whose Assembly district includes Beacon).

Clean Slate

On Nov. 16, Hochul signed the Clean Slate Act, which seals the criminal records of people with misdemeanors and all but the most serious felonies, such as murder and sex crimes. Sponsors say this will remove restrictions on people who find Alexandria Gilleo is a makeup artist who owns My Zen Den in Beacon.

You work with many professional athletes. How did that begin?
I grew up playing sports and have always been a sports fan. About 10 years ago, I landed my first gig with ESPN and it slowly grew from there. Working with athletes and actors and other celebrities is a mix of hard work, dedication and being in the right place at the right time. I get new clients largely through word-of-mouth. I love to be a part of the hustle and the grind, and I love people.

How did My Zen Den come about?
I have always suffered from autoimmune conditions, including psoriasis and arthritis, but I didn’t start to take care of my health until I was 25, when my dad passed away from a massive stroke. I started to read a lot about movement, nutrition, mental health, physical health. I started to apply all these new tools and tactics, such as red-light therapy, for my psoriasis and joint pain. I have a little red light in a room in my house that I call “my zen den,” where I meditate. When the pandemic hit and I wasn’t doing any makeup, I thought it was the perfect opportunity to bring my zen den to the community.

Why did you choose Beacon?
The city is nice because you can walk to everything. I don’t think there’s many other towns in the Hudson Valley like that. It’s small, but it’s big. It’s also constantly growing with newcomers, people retiring or new families. I felt like it is a place with a lot of different types of people.

Is there a connection between wellness and beauty?
In my experience, when you start doing the inner work — I’m talking about mental, physical and spiritual, those three elements — when you start nurturing yourself, eating properly, getting enough sleep, creating a skin-care routine and connecting to whatever phase is aligned with you, when you start doing all these things, it shows on the outside. You start elevating and just looking better.

What is your favorite part of running a small business?
I love everything we sell, I love everything we do, but truly, to my core, my favorite part is connecting with people. I met my boyfriend through that space, I met some of my closest friends. I love hearing other people’s stories. I get to ask every single person who comes in the door, look them in their eyes: “Hey, how are you doing? Like, really? How are you?” People will just unleash. A lot of people need to talk to someone, or they’re looking for a safe space. To me, it is the most fulfilling aspect of business.

Beacon parking

Sounds like a ruse to me (“Beacon to Drop Parking Requirements?” Nov. 24). Has anyone tried to get around the Hudson Valley by public transportation? How have Hudson, Buffalo, Boston and Burlington, Vermont, fared after dropping minimum parking standards for developers? Have rents come down? (I lived in Boston ages ago — it’s not a parking city.) Are parking garages coming to Beacon next?

Howard Condyles, via Instagram

Progressive communities that are thriving are realizing that developers and investors won’t risk a project if they think (after careful research) they won’t be able to sell or rent units without parking. I hope Beacon makes this happen and that communities like Peekskill with a surplus of parking follow suit.

Jim Striebich, via Instagram

Parking, like everything else, is a complicated issue that everyone seems to have an opinion on but few understand. There are two types of people in this context: those for whom car is king and those for whom walking is a way of life.

In the Hudson Valley, the latter is much smaller in size than the former and usually with much less of the desire to consume. We can eliminate parking minimums for some types of developments but not for business, which is the biggest user of parking resources and the entity with the most to gain.

Parking requires planning, something most municipalities don’t want to do because planning for parking simply is not sexy. It’s about as uninteresting as trash, another thing that is often an afterthought. What we need are stewards of the public realm who would oversee parking facilities, dead space, potential public spaces, sidewalk life and homelessness as it manifests onto the use of our public spaces for living arrangements. Parking is psychological above all else and does not have a one-size-fits-all answer.

Atticus Lanigan, via Instagram

Cold Spring parking

I don’t think there is a solution to the problem of parking in Cold Spring because the nature of the village cannot be altered to accommodate the numbers of visitors we have seen this summer, or those that will show up once the Hudson Highlands Fjord Trail builds its boardwalk from Dockside Park northward (“In Cold Spring, A Price on Parking,” Nov. 17).

Somehow, over the decades, a small factory village became a tourist attraction. Without brutal modification, which nobody wants, the village is simply stuck. To change it to handle the ridiculous level of tourists would likely solve the problem because nobody would want to visit a village that consists mainly of parking meters and parking lots. Then they can all move to Nesselrode maybe.

Steve Sohn, Philipstown

Four dollars an hour to park? That’s more expensive than Greenwich, Connecticut!

David Licata, via Instagram

Now can we get the sidewalks fixed? And street lighting?

Timothy Chevtaijin, via Instagram

In response to Bill Pugh’s letter in the Nov. 24 issue: The parking-permit program is simple, and its elements have been publicly discussed and explained many times. There is no “process for deciding who gets one.” There is no “selection process.” There is no “process for allocating” the permits. Instead, every household in the Residential Parking Program area that submits a valid application may receive up to two permits.

When the applications are available, the village will communicate that it’s time to apply via email, social media and the village website. Villagers who wish to be kept informed can subscribe to receive updates at coldspringny.gov/subscribe.

Fjord Trail data

The Hudson Highlands Fjord Trail Data Committee was created for one reason and one reason only: for HHFT to check off another box (“Fjord Trail Data Concerns,” Nov. 10). In the end it can claim it reached out to the municipalities, asking each to participate. However, the process is flawed from the start because the committee’s review is based on HHFT’s vision and planned boardwalk attraction.

To reflect the true needs and interests of Philipstown and Cold Spring, the Data Committee needs to focus on what the community wants. The original objective was to create safe passage for hikers from Cold Spring to Breakneck. Why not return to what the community supported and add enhanced access to Dockside Park and Little Stony Point for those with disabilities? The original goal can be achieved without creating such a massive blight on the landscape, without bringing in hikers and without turning the Highlands into the “epicenter” of outdoor recreation for the region.

If the concern is accessibility to the so-called

“trail” for everyone, then the committee should be asking: How this is accomplished at the other, much heralded, “seven entry points” scenario. Garrison is discussing changing the rationale, that whatever works at Dutchess Manor downslope is excellent. When I raised this idea of Dutchess Manor magically being the entry point of choice, my skepticism was triggered more by the impracticality or wishful thinking of visitors “playing along” with adding the extra-to-from hike just to get to their Breakneck hike in the first place. However, a one-solution-fits-all rationale that whatever works at Dutchess Manor will work at Dockside, is more of a rhetorical flourish than a solution.

In the final analysis, some critics have accused HHFT of trying to make Data Committee members mouthpieces for its designs while simultaneously expecting committee members to mouthpieces for theirs.

James Labate, Cold Spring Labate is a member of the Data Committee. The U.S. Access Board, the federal entity that sets standards for accessibility in public settings, is quite clear about not degrading natural areas to create access. Its guidelines state that creating disability access is not advised if “use of manufactured building materials or engineered construction techniques to comply with specific provisions in the technical requirements for trails could fundamentally alter the natural or undeveloped nature of the setting and change the recreational experience.” A river-edge, elevated concrete structure above the river from Cold Spring to Breakneck Ridge would, of course, “fundamentally alter the natural or undeveloped nature of the setting and change the recreational experience.” It would be destruction of a natural area in order to provide access to it. Hope Scott, Philipstown Fine wine I walked past the Champlin & Son shop, now Blacksmith Wines, on the way to school in the 1980s (“Fine Wines at a Price,” Nov. 24). Clean Hudson
It’s so true that people don’t listen to the restrictions on eating fish from the Hudson River (“Report: Cleanup Falling Short,” Nov. 17). You can cite Environmental Protection Agency data and people will still insist it’s “liberal propaganda” or some other thing or another because they aren’t seeing these stories in the news.

The only way to make conditions safer is not to depend on the actions of people who aren’t hearing about the restrictions (from a source they trust, anyway), but to actually clean the river.

Weird Beacon
Out-of-town people make changes to the heating system in the main building, "Weird Beacon," Nov. 24). The locals have to live with the New York City influence and transplants move when they are done with Beacon. I drove downtown Main Street recently. Lots of weird people. Thanks, out-of-towners.
Wayne Theiss, Beacon

Haldane master plan
It is troubling that Haldane’s master campus plan, which includes replacing the heating system in the main building, does not call for transitioning to a modern, clean heating/cooling system like the heat pumps installed by the Garrison and Putnam Valley districts (“Haldane Capital Plan Moves Forward,” Nov. 24). I commend district leaders for responding to community concerns and agreeing to carefully consider clean-energy options. Since heating systems often last decades, the system they choose will impact the school and the community well into the future.

Electric heat pumps provide both heating and cooling and are much more energy-efficient and cost-effective than oil or gas heating systems. Though the upfront cost of heat pumps may be higher, state and federal incentives can lower the price, and since they require significantly less energy to run, heat pumps result in meaningful savings over the lifetime of the equipment.

Heat pumps are also the healthiest option. They support advanced ventilation and filtration systems better than fossil-fuel heating systems do and would improve the air quality throughout the building. Because they are combustion-free, heat pumps do not emit the many pollutants that result from burning fossil fuels.

Haldane is a certified Climate Smart Community, committed to doing everything we can to reduce harmful emissions, and, as a public institution, Haldane has an obligation to help us reduce our shared carbon footprint. Beyond this, by embracing excellent, proven, clean technologies, the school can teach students firsthand about effective solutions to climate change. A school, of all places, should be a leader in the fight for a livable future.

How many more classrooms do they need? There were only 700 to 800 students even before the new high school opened and we all fit fine. Now there are only around 900.
Steve Smith, via Facebook

I graduated in 2018 and the classrooms had empty seats. This seems like yet another plan to push out the Cold Spring locals, making it impossible to live here affordably with the extra tax costs.
Luke Junjulas, via Facebook

It’s disturbing that in such tough economic times the school would push out a project with this magnitude of a price tag. I hope there is a smaller-scale, more-affordable option being considered. It is already expensive to live in Cold Spring, and for good reasons, but this is completely unnecessary.

Under the name Leroy Truth Investigations, Filipowski posts videos on YouTube that outline cases from around the country of what he portrays as egregious police misconduct. His channel has 20,000 followers; a 34-minute video about Cold Spring, posted two months ago, has been viewed nearly 51,000 times.

In another video that has received 40,000 views, he describes Foley as “the meanest mayor in America.” After filming at the village’s Community Day in July, he posted a video alleging “the people are scared” of local officers. He claims that Officer-in-Charge Larry Burke and Officer Kenneth Baker, who gave him the ticket, should be fired because they were named during past jobs in complaints or lawsuits.

In May, The Boston Globe described a scene in which Filipowski and a colleague provoked passersby outside a suburban public library in what they called a “First Amendment audit, a kind of performative protest that tests their free speech rights by confronting government employees in public places, often provoking objections that generate viewership. For municipal workers, the stunts add to the rash of hostile behavior many face these days.”

Filipowski has appeared at several Cold Spring meetings, along with supporters, shooting video, even after he was asked to leave when he became argumentative and disruptive during the public comment period. On one occasion, after a meeting, he and his supporters followed board members across the street to Doug’s Pretty Good Pub, where Filipowski was asked to leave by the owner.

Foley said Filipowski’s followers on YouTube are prompted to harass public employees and elected officials with aggressive, even threatening phone calls, emails and social media posts.

There is no law in New York that requires municipal boards to hear comments except at public hearings. Each board makes its own rules. In a follow-up email, Foley said the Village Board would “consider questions from the press and the public on a case-by-case basis.” She added: “It is appropriate and lawful for the board to choose, on a meeting-by-meeting basis, to restrict comment to topics on the current agenda, so that discussions are focused and productive.

“None of us would have chosen to modify the public comment policy in the way we did had we and our staff not faced such pressing, unrelenting threats and chaos in session,” she wrote. “The policy does extend flexibility and discretion to the trustees on a meeting-by-meeting basis. It is my hope that our village meetings will return to normal order so that we can continue to be welcoming to residents’ desires to speak and engage.”

But, according to the town, allowing properties to store up to 400,000 gallons of oil represents a significant danger of environmental damage from leaks, spills and the damage to tanks from natural disasters or extreme weather.

“We have identified a flaw in the zoning and are addressing it in an effort to protect the environment, specifically the Cove Creek aquifer,” said Supervisor John Van Tassel. The aquifer, which lies beneath the creek, parallels Route 9 from East Mountain Road South to the town’s border with Fishkill. Groundwater from the aquifer feeds the wells that supply residents and businesses in the highly developed northern part of Route 9, and the towns of Fishkill and Wappinger, the Village of Fishkill and Beacon.

Along with Foundry Brook, which supplies water for Cold Spring and Nelsonville, the aquifer was identified as a key water source in the most recent Philipstown Comprehensive Plan, which recommends the creation of a watershed coalition to monitor its quality.

The current law applies to “a tank, holding facility, or other container for oil or petroleum of any kind and in any form including but not limited to oil, petroleum fuel oil, oil sludge, oil refuse, oil mixed with other waste, crude oil, gasoline and kerosene.” The oil does not have to be for a property’s main use; it can also be for “part of the main use, or an accessory use.”

If the Town Board passes the version drafted, the moratorium would not apply to applications for single- and two-family housing or applications for multiple housing units “provided that the oil storage facility involved in the development is the minimum necessary to meet the needs of the proposed development and does not exceed 10,000 gallons.”

Commercial developments would be exempt if the oil-storage facility is to be used solely for consumption on-site; the capacity is the minimum necessary for the development’s needs; and the capacity does not exceed 10,000 gallons.

Property owners applying for “expansion, alteration or modification” of storage facilities that do not call for an increase in size or capacity also would be exempt.

Kyriacou asked the committee not just to study Fishkill Avenue (Route 52), but also to develop proposals related to a Fishkill Avenue-to-Matteawan Road connector; a possible trail running along the dormant Beacon rail line; and linkages to the Lofts at Beacon apartments, Fishkill Creek and the city’s rail trail, which will start at the Metro-North station and, when complete, run along the creek.

Kyriacou said he wanted the committee, which he is calling the Fishkill Avenue Concepts Committee, to consider what the Fishkill Avenue streetscape should look like, “recognizing that it is a main thoroughfare into and out of Beacon.” Specifically, he asked the group to think about building design standards, the proximity of buildings to the street and sidewalks.

Another topic will be an access route from Fishkill Avenue to Matteawan Road, which, if created, would connect Route 52 to Beacon High School and Rombout Middle School, Camp Beacon and existing senior housing developments. “That includes thinking about bikes, pedestrians and transit along an access road,” Kyriacou said, adding: “If any additional state land becomes available, what might be appropriate uses,” such as light industrial or affordable housing?

Other questions for the group will include:

■ What are appropriate bike routes, and how would they connect to commercial and residential areas?

■ How should the proposed rail trail adjacent to Route 52 be incorporated into concepts?

■ Could a pocket park be developed alongside the rail trail and where?

■ What spots along Route 52 might be appropriate as viewsheds?

Like the Main Street Access Committee that Kyriacou created in 2020, the Fishkill Avenue committee will have access to the city planner, though it’s unknown who that will be. John Clarke, a former Dutchess County planner who was hired in 2016 as a planning consultant, is retiring at the end of the year.

City Administrator Chris White said Wednesday that a new consultant is expected to be hired in January.

The City Council began to discuss rezoning a mile-long stretch of the Fishkill Avenue corridor three months ago, after four sizable parcels owned by the Healey Brothers auto dealerships were listed for sale. The goal, council members said, would be to encourage mixed-use development that would include affordable housing and create a more walkable, “Main Street-type” feel for the area.

As proposed, the rezoning would have affected about 30 properties between Memorial Park and Mill Street. However, a group of about 70 residents sent the council a petition asking that parcels in the corridor on Mead Avenue remain residential.

The council seemed close to scheduling a public hearing in October when Kyriacou said he thought the city might be moving too fast. The creation of a zoning district, he said, would be more appropriate to discuss during the city’s next update to its comprehensive plan, which is expected in 2027.
Ryan Introduces Bill to Ban Anchorages

Says language would clarify 2021 law

Rep. Pat Ryan, a Democrat whose district includes Beacon, on Nov. 16 introduced a bill that would ban barges from anchoring for extended periods on the Hudson River between Yonkers and Kingston, including locations in the Highlands.

The proposed Hudson River Protection Act, introduced with Rep. Marc Molinaro, a Republican whose district includes northern Dutchess County, would amend a 2021 law to remove “any uncertainty related to geographic definitions,” Ryan said in a statement.

The 2021 law states that the Coast Guard “shall suspend the establishment of new anchorage grounds” between Yonkers and Kingston. The Coast Guard said in a July directive that, in retrospect, the law only applies to waters in the Port of New York, which extends to the Mario Cuomo Bridge and that barges were free to anchor as long as needed north of that point. Its directive has since been put on hold.

Ryan’s bill would add a line to the law stating that the Coast Guard will prohibit any vessel anchoring between Yonkers and Kingston except at anchorage grounds established before Jan. 1, 2021.

Putnam Valley Adopts Short-Term Rental Law

Regulations require permits, inspections

After five public hearings, the Putnam Valley Board on Nov. 15 approved short-term-rental regulations that include a permit system and mandatory annual safety inspections.

After a three-month grace period that ends in February, residents or companies that want to offer short-term rentals booked through sites such as Airbnb must obtain a special permit from the Planning Board and pay a $500 fee per unit, along with $500 in escrow and $100 annually for inspections.

The regulations limit rentals to single-family homes and require a local manager who lives within 30 miles of Town Hall. The annual fire and safety inspections, conducted by the Building Department, will include any owner-occupied units. Permits will be valid for three years. No owner can have more than three at any time (one owner-occupied and two non-owner-occupied). When an owner applies for a permit, the town will notify every neighbor within 200 feet of the property.

Beacon Market Gets Full-Time Manager

Common Ground expands role and fills job

Common Ground Farm, which runs the weekly Beacon Farmers Market, on Monday (Nov. 27) announced it had expanded the role of market manager to full-time and promoted Amy Bandolik to the position.

Bandolik will assume her new role this month and continue her responsibilities as market community engagement manager at Common Ground. She is also the founder and owner of Hudson Valley Food & Farm Tours.

The market, which attracts about 2,000 visitors each week, operates year-round in the DMV parking lot at 223 Main St., rain or shine, on Sundays from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Toys for Tots Underway

Local program honors Anthony Phillips

The Toys for Tots program, sponsored by the Marine Corps Reserve, this year marks its 30th anniversary in Philipstown but without its longtime leader.

Anthony Phillips Sr., a Marine veteran who organized the toy drive for years, died Nov. 9 at age 83. The Knights of Columbus Loretto Council No. 536 has announced it will take over the program, which is now the Anthony Phillips Toys for Tots Memorial Drive. (Phillips was also a member of the Knights.)

New, unwrapped toys may be donated through Dec. 19 at the Butterfield Library, Downey Energy, Drug World and Foodtown in Cold Spring or Deb’s Hair Design in Nelsenville.

The toys will be distributed Dec. 20 to Philipstown residents from 10 to 11:30 a.m. at the Cold Spring firehouse. For information, call Dan Dillon at 845-519-7799.

Boscobel in Garrison is also collecting toys. In Beacon, they may be dropped at the Howland Public Library, Hudson Valley Federal Credit Union, Healey Hyundai, Healey Chrysler, or Chemprene Inc.; and in Fishkill at the village or town police departments, the I-84 Diner and All Sport.

Beacon High Will Add to Hall of Fame

Former athletes, coach and team to be enshrined

Beacon High School will induct three members of the Class of 1973 (Dave Eraca, baseball, and Rodney Paulin and Joe Simmons, basketball); two members of the Class of 2016 (Jummie Akinwumi, track and field, and Lenny Torres Jr., baseball; the 2012 softball team, which won a sectional championship; and longtime basketball coach Randy Casale into its Athletic Hall of Fame on Jan. 5.

The induction ceremony will be held from 5 to 9:30 p.m. at St. Rocco’s Society, 26 South Chestnut St. To reserve a seat, email bocohs2212@gmail.com by Dec. 15.

Gereghty Drops Out of House Race

Endorses campaign by Jones to challenge Lawler

Liz Whitmer Gereghty said on Wednesday (Nov. 29) that she is suspending her campaign for the 17th Congressional District, which includes Philipstown, and will endorse fellow Democrat Mondaire Jones for the seat in the U.S. House of Representatives.

Gereghty, an entrepreneur who is a member of the Katonah-Lewisboro school board and the younger sister of Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer, in April was the first declared challenger to Rep. Mike Lawler, a Republican who in 2022 upset incumbent Sean Patrick Maloney.

Jones, a former congressman who represented District 17 before redistricting changed its boundaries and Maloney opted to run for the seat, launched his campaign in July.

Handling the Heat

State offers savings programs

New York State offers assistance for homeowners who struggle with energy costs over the winter. They include:

- Home Energy Assistance Program - HEAP provides up to $796 to homeowners and renters depending on income and household size (e.g., a family of four with a maximum monthly gross income of $5,838, or about $70,000 annually). See otda.ny.gov/programs/heap.
- Energy Affordability Program - This initiative provides income-eligible consumers with a discount on their monthly electric and/or gas bills. New Yorkers can be enrolled automatically if they receive benefits from a government assistance program. See dpa.ny.gov/winter.
- New York Energy Advisor - This site helps income-eligible New Yorkers locate programs to get help paying utility bills and receive offers on heating assistance. See energyadvisor.ny.gov.

their criminal records are obstacles to employment, housing or education.

Under the law, misdemeanor convictions will be automatically sealed three years after sentencing if there are no further convictions or pending charges, while lower-level felony convictions will be sealed eight years after sentencing or the completion of a prison term, parole or probation.

The law goes into effect in November 2024; the state Office of Court Administration has until late 2027 to identify and seal existing records. By one estimate, more than 2 million convictions will be sealed, although they will be still be accessible to law enforcement, judges, prosecutors and for background checks when hiring teachers, day care workers and police officers, and for gun permits.

“The Clean Slate Act removes a huge obstacle for people who have served their time and are trying to become productive New Yorkers,” Levenberg said in a statement. “I have seen firsthand how genuine rehabilitation efforts, like Hudson Link (in Ossining) prevent recidivism by helping people develop the ability to get what they need through legal means. Other states with similar legislation have seen crime rates go down and employment go up.”

Rolison opposed the law, saying in a statement that it “constitutes an unbelievable new social contract in which ordinary citizens are under state-sanctioned gag orders, unable to ask basic questions of those to whom they are entrusting property such as an apartment or hiring for a job at a family-run business.” He said “the law makes no exceptions for hate crimes where the underlying offense is less than a Class A felony; no exceptions for domestic violence; no exceptions for assaults on police and firefighters; no exceptions for home invasions and homicides other than murder.”

Veterans
On Nov. 10, Hochul signed legislation that expands eligibility as of April 1 from disabled veterans to all veterans and Gold Star families for free lifetime access to parks, historic sites and recreational facilities operated by the state. See parks.ny.gov/admission/lifetime-liberty-pass.aspx.

Hochul also signed a law to establish a program called V.I.P. NY that will set aside 10 percent of paid internships in the Assembly and Senate for veterans recruited through county service agencies.

MTA and disability
On Nov. 20, Hochul enacted a law that requires at least one voting member of the Metropolitan Transportation Authority board to be “transit dependent” because of a physical disability. The governor appointed to the position Dr. John-Ross Rizzo, a specialist in rehabilitation medicine and adaptive technology at NYU Langone Health in New York City, who has had vision loss since he was a child.

AED for sports
On Nov. 24, Hochul signed legislation that requires camps and youth sports programs with five or more teams to establish automated external defibrillator (AED) guidelines and to have at every camp, game and practice at least one employee, volunteer, coach, umpire or other adult who is trained on the device. AEDs are used in response to cardiac arrest.

Power lines
On Nov. 22, Hochul enacted a law that allows a report from a resident to trigger a 36-hour deadline for a utility to secure a downed power line. Under the previous law, only a report from a municipal emergency official could start the clock.

Freelance payments
On Nov. 22, Hochul signed legislation known as the Freelance Isn’t Free Act, modeled after a New York City law passed in 2017 to protect independent contractors from “wage theft” by clients.

The law requires anyone paying a freelancer at least $800 within a three-month period to provide a written contract and payment within 30 days unless agreed otherwise. The state Department of Labor will provide model contracts and an administrative process for resolving disputes, and the state attorney general can pursue legal action on behalf of freelancers.

The law excludes sales representatives, lawyers, medical professionals and construction contractors. It also excludes, as hirers, local governments.

A spokesperson for Rolison said the senator opposed the bill because it creates a “new, large-scale program” at the Department of Labor to investigate and adjudicate disputes but provides no funding, “which is why the governor took the correct action in 2022 to veto it.”

Drug-testing strips
On Nov. 19, Hochul enacted a law named for Matthew Horan, a Westchester County man who died in 2020 of a fentanyl overdose, that will allow health care professionals and pharmacists to distribute up to five strips at a time that can be used to test for fentanyl or xylazine, which are often added to street drugs but are deadly in amounts as tiny as the equivalent of 10 grains of salt. Since New York State began offering test strips online earlier this year, it has received more than 3.4 million orders. The law takes effect Dec. 19.

Tenant rights
On Nov. 17, Hochul signed bills that:

- Require owners of apartment buildings to provide the names and contact information of residents to first responders during emergencies such as a fire, gas leak, building collapse or natural disaster. Under the law, the list cannot be used for any other purpose.
- The law was prompted by a fire in 2019 in Yonkers in which emergency personnel had trouble getting a list of the 86 residents to ensure everyone had been evacuated.

Passed by Assembly, 142-3

Ballot measure language
On Nov. 17, Hochul enacted a law that requires proposed constitutional amendments and other ballot measures to be written using a “plain-language” standard. Specifically, the language must be at or below an eighth-grade reading level and with no more than 15 words for the title, 30 words for the question and 30 words for a statement of the practical impact of a yes or no vote.

The law also mandates that the state Board of Elections release the wording of ballot measures at least four months before the election, for public comment.

Our Small Town

Haldane Drama to present classic Thornton Wilder play

By Alison Rooney

A decade ago, Martha Mechalakos, who heads Haldane Drama, chose Thornton Wilder’s Our Town as the high school’s fall play. Though perennially one of the country’s most-produced high school plays, it had a specific resonance in Philipstown, to the extent that it felt almost as if it had been written here.

Her choice represented many firsts, most notably Haldane Drama’s first production of “serious” literature. The success of the show “inspired me to keep bringing great literature to the students,” Mechalakos says. She cites Sean McNall, a Haldane school board member and director of education at the Hudson Valley Shakespeare Festival, who said: “Plays studied as literature in school are not meant to be experienced in ‘wretched isolation.’ One needs to put them on the stage, and let the students experience the play from the inside out.”

In the ensuing years, Haldane Drama has presented everything from A Midsummer Night’s Dream to The Laramie Project, about the 1998 murder of Matthew Shepard, a gay college student in Wyoming.

Within the 10-year gap, Mechalakos has seen two collective groups of students pass through the high school on the hill. “It was time to bring this magnificent play to a new group of students,” she says. “I would like to think that I’ve learned a lot in the past nine years. Though I’m incorporating many of the same ideas, much will be new and all of it is with a new group.”

Mechalakos says she particularly enjoys working on Our Town because the scenes are small and not peppered with too many characters, which lets her “work each scene with the students, talking about what each character is saying and doing.” Once again, owing to the popularity of the school’s drama program, Mechalakos has double-cast the production, which means every auditioning student gets cast.

The leading part of the Stage Manager is ambitious, with pages of uninterrupted text. The role is daunting even to experienced professional actors. Taking up the mantle will be senior Percy Parker and freshman Lincoln Wayland. “The Current posed a few questions to them — and to junior Amelia Alayon and sophomore Molly Bernstein, who share the role of Emily — relating to Cold Spring and its fictitious equivalent, Grover’s Corners.

In the first scenes, the Stage Manager conveys the setting, citing Main Street, the railway station, churches, Town Hall, the grocery store, the cemetery and “the same names as are around here now.” Did that sound familiar?

WAYLAND: Yes, except for the last part. That isn’t to say there aren’t a lot of generational families here, but I feel that in the last 10 to 20 years a lot of “city people” have moved into the village, my family being one of them. The description of the town, however, is uncannily accurate. Especially the part about all the churches — six in Grover’s Corners, five here. The parallels between our community and the fictional one are kind of remarkable.

BERNSTEIN: I always pictured Cold Spring as similar to Grover’s Corners. The sun over the mountains in the morning is so special.

ALAYON: Envisioning Grover’s Corners as Cold Spring makes the acting part a lot easier. During Our Town, you see Emily grow up. I share a lot of characteristics with her, and I am seeing how she took Grover’s Corners for granted in her life.

BERNSTEIN: I have always pictured Cold Spring as similar to Grover’s Corners. The sun over the mountains in the morning is something that only people who live here truly understand, and it makes living here so special.

PARKER: Cold Spring is so similar to Grover’s Corners, I think it would be impossible not to think of it throughout the show. When I say, “On the whole; things don’t change much around here,” I picture myself at 3 years old, walking to preschool on the same road I take to rehearsal now at 17. It’s such an emotional show to be doing as a senior, and I can only hope that the love I have for Cold Spring is reflected in my character’s love for his small town.

In many ways, as a person who gets older, life tends to go quicker. I’ve been noticing this more over the past few school years, especially high school.

ALAYON: I don’t really relate to that idea yet, but I know I will. All I hear from adults is about how fast time moves! I see how quickly each grade goes by. It felt like just yesterday I was a freshman, and now I will have to start looking at colleges! I try to make an effort to live in the moment, but it is difficult.

WAYLAND: I believe the decisions you make when you’re young — particularly in high school and college — will profoundly affect the rest of your life. And that as you age, the years start to go by faster and faster. You can blink and it’ll be over.

Thinking of Our Town, what would you consider the “soul” of Cold Spring?

PARKER: It’s the teenagers. Maybe I’m biased, but there’s something special about growing up with the same kids, making it from kindergarten to grade 12 together. We’ve all become vastly different. Football players, mathematicians, poets... We’ll go off on our own paths soon enough, and if we go away, each of us will have to try to explain what it was to grow up in this little village on the Hudson. The greatest part is no one but us will understand.

Our Town will be performed at 7 p.m. on Dec. 8 and Dec. 9 at the Haldane auditorium, 15 Craigside Drive, in Cold Spring. Tickets are $12, or $5 for students and seniors online (bit.ly/haldane-our-town) or at the door.

Keep the trail on the ground & out of the river.

In 2007, Philipstown produced a feasibility study for trails leading from Cold Spring to Breakneck Ridge. That study identified two options; both are simple and on the ground. Neither require the massive construction needed for the Fjord trail plan now being forced upon our community.

As a community, let’s re-examine all alternatives and build a trail system that will:

• Protect hikers, nature and our quality of life.
• Limit visitation by implementing a free hiking pass system.
• Improve access to Little Stony Point for visitors with disabilities.
• Align the new trails with existing trails for easy access.

ProtectTheHighlands.org
HHFT is happy to share that we have officially answered all 210 questions submitted by residents in advance of the May 8, 2023 Joint Public Session on the Fjord Trail, hosted by The Villages of Cold Spring and Nelsonville and the Town of Philipstown.

The municipalities collected the 210 questions from the community (64 residents submitted questions) and then asked community members to rank their top five priority questions. The 15 questions that received the highest ranking were given to HHFT and NYS Parks to answer at the public meeting.

HHFT wanted to ensure that all residents who took the time to submit questions would have theirs answered. We committed to answering the remaining 195 questions, and did so over the course of the 195 days that followed the event.

All questions and answers are available to view at hhft.org/frequently-asked-questions/#may8

Answers are searchable by keyword, or, if you submitted a question, you can search by your own name.

Thank you to all who submitted questions and engaged in this process! We hope you find the provided information useful.

We look forward to continuing the dialogue on the Fjord Trail project in the coming months. We know getting it right matters.

Sincerely,
The Fjord Trail Team

Kingston: Church to Music Space

A violinist has proposed transforming the long-vacant Methodist Church into a music school and performance venue. Tom Krueger shared his proposal with the city Planning Board last month, according to the Daily Freeman. He envisions the Kingston Music Initiative in the basement and a concert hall in the former sanctuary. “It has beautiful sound,” he said of the space.

He said he didn’t anticipate attendance would exceed what the church had when active. The former parsonage could house musicians in residency, he said, and the church’s owners said they would donate the structure to the music school if the Planning Board were open to the project.

City Planner Sue Cahill offered her endorsement: “It’s an excellent adaptive reuse,” she said. The church, built in 1888, formerly housed a homeless shelter and wedding space before being sold to its current owners in 2019 for $687,500.

MUSICAL INTERLUDE — A trio from the Doansburg Chamber Ensemble — harpist Joy Plaisted of Garrison, flutist Christine Smith of Brewster and violist Ina Litera of New York City — performed works by Claude Debussy, Jacques Ibert and Sonny Burnette at St. Mary’s Episcopal Church in Cold Spring on Nov. 25.

Shakespeare Festival Unveils Theater Design

Groundbreaking expected in 2024
By Leonard Sparks

The curtain opened Tuesday (Nov. 28) on the open-air theater that an architecture firm is designing for the Hudson Valley Shakespeare Festival’s new home at the former Garrison Golf Course.

Studio Gang released designs for the curved-roof, timber-framed structure, which will replace the fabric tent that HVSF used during its run of more than 30 years at Boscobel in Garrison and for the last two seasons at the former golf course.

The 13,850-square-foot structure will be the first purpose-built theater in the country with platinum certification by Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design (LEED), according to HVSF. Its plans include solar panels, rainwater capture, reduced embeddable carbon, and other elements. It will sit amid vegetative screening.

“Studio Gang and the team have met visually stunning, but also supremely functional and sustainable in every sense,” said Davis McCallum, HVSF’s artistic director.

The stage’s proscenium arch will face Breakneck Ridge, the Hudson River and Storm King Mountain, and the theater will include an outdoor space where the audience can mingle with performers.

The design also includes a back-of-house facility for actors and technicians, and concessions and bathroom pavilions.

Groundbreaking is expected in 2024 for this phase of HVSF’s larger project, which calls for, within five to 15 years, the addition of 26 units of housing for visiting artists, rehearsal and administrative space, and a welcome center.

The Philipstown Planning Board completed its environmental review of the project on Nov. 16 when it approved a “findings statement” that details how HVSF will minimize traffic, noise and other impacts from the development.

HVSF still must secure site-plan approval from the Planning Board, zoning amendments from the Town Board and permits from various agencies.

HVSF Announces 2024 Shows

For the first time in its 37-year history, the Hudson Valley Shakespeare Festival schedule will not include a play by the Bard, although Kholoud Sawaf will direct a touring production of Much Ado About Nothing.

However, one of the three plays under the tent will be By the Queen, an adaptation by Whitney White of the Henry VI trilogy, which HVSF has never produced.

“It includes speeches and scenes from the Henry VI plays and Richard III and weaves them together with original writing from the point of view of Queen Margaret,” explained Davis McCallum, HVSF’s artistic director.

“Shakespeare fans will love it, as I did when I saw the world premiere at Trinity Rep in Providence, Rhode Island” in 2022.

McCallum noted that HVSF “did two major Shakespeare titles last season [Henry V and Love’s Labor’s Lost], and Shakespeare will always remain a cornerstone of our programming” but that 2024 will be “a season curated around the theme of adaptation.”

In addition to By the Queen, HVSF will present two world premieres:

• The Murder of Roger Ackroyd, an adaptation by Heidi Armbruster of Agatha Christie’s 1926 novel starring detective Hercule Poirot. It will be directed by Ryan Quinn.

• Medea: Re-Versed, an adaptation of Euripides by Luis Quintero co-produced with Red Bull Theater and Bedlam. It will be directed by Nathan Winkelstein.

Richard Weissbrod

Richard Stephen Philip “Dick” Weissbrod died Nov. 15 after suffering a stroke while visiting family in Massachusetts. He shared his final days with loved ones.

Dick resided in Cold Spring, New York, for 25 years with his life partner, Dianne Richey, who survives him. They moved to Cold Spring after residing in Brooklyn and working in Manhattan for many years.

He is survived by his cherished son, Philip A. Weissbrod, daughter-in-law Carolina Deutsch-Garcia, and beloved granddaughters Isabel and Nina, who reside in Encinitas, California. He also is survived by Dianne’s daughter, Dianne Bauer (Edward) of Nelsonville and their children, Thomas Cunnigham, Joseph Cunningham (Severine and son Liam), Katharine Cunningham, Erika Bauer and Edward Bauer, who grieve his loss.

Born May 18, 1946, Dick was the son of Philip Carl Weissbrod and Ruth Winkelsteadt. The family made their home in Lenox, Massachusetts. Dick is survived by his loving brother, David (Carol); nephew Michael (Elissa) and their children; and niece Natalie and daughter Neveah. In addition to his brother, Dick is survived by his devoted sister and brother-in-law, Kate and Russell French.

After graduating from Harvard University, Dick served in Vietnam. He then earned a master’s degree and Ph.D. at Northwestern University. He joined Johns Hopkins University as assistant professor in 1974. A career opportunity in publishing brought him to New York in 1981.

Throughout his career, Dick enjoyed being a mentor to students, interns, employees, colleagues and extended family. It is a tribute to him that he maintained friendships going back many years and enjoyed regular communications with those whose lives he touched.

In lieu of flowers, donations may be made in Richard’s honor to the American Red Cross (redcross.org) or the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals (aspca.org).

112 Years of Local Scouting

Philpstown Troop founded in 1911
By Jude Morrison

Jaiden Gunther of Cold Spring led a recent meeting of Boy Scout Troop 437 at the Garrison Fish & Game Club focusing on wilderness survival.

Members of the troop, which is based in Philpstown, learned what to do if lost in the woods and how to build a shelter with sticks, leaves and moss.

Gunther, the troop’s senior patrol leader and a freshman at Haldane High School, has been a member of the Boy Scouts for three years. He says he loves the organization because it gives him the opportunity to learn outdoor skills while having fun with his friends.

Scouting has a long tradition in Philpstown, dating to October 1911, when Scoutmaster Franklin Byxbe organized Cold Spring Troop 1, according to the Putnam History Museum. Its 20 scouts met on Friday evenings at Grove’s Hall, at the corner of Main Street and Morris Avenue.

Troop 1 eventually became Troop 37. By the 1930s, it had dissolved and reorganized. Troop 4 in Garrison was created during the same period. At some point, Troops 4 and 37 combined to form Cub Scout Troop 137 and Boy Scout Troop 437, according to records from the National Eagle Scout Association.

Leaders like Gunther and Tom Campanile, Troop 437’s scoutmaster for the last three years, continue the deep-rooted tradition of Boy Scouts in the community.

Campanile, a partner with the consulting firm Ernst & Young, became an Eagle Scout, the highest rank in scouting, in 1989. He has been an adult leader with Troop 437 for 15 years and is the vice chair of the Greater Hudson Valley Council’s Scavenger Hunt at the Durland Scout Reservation, the Greater Hudson Valley Council’s 1,400-acre camp in Putnam Valley.

Aiden Noormae, a first-year scout with Troop 437 and a seventh grader at Haldane School, has been a member of the Boy Scouts for three years. He says he loves the organization as a “scout-led, adult-guided” organization.

“Every success I’ve enjoyed professionally I owe to scouting,” Campanile said.

In the past few years, Philpstown scouts have canoed in the boundary waters of Minnesota, traveled to South Korea to participate in the World Scout Jamboree, skied downhill at Whiteface Mountain in upstate New York, sailed in the Bahamas and backpacked in New Mexico.

The troop’s members have also traveled to West Virginia for the National Jamboree, a 10-day event held every four years that draws scouts from all over the country for activities such as concerts, bike parks and ziplines.

Locally, they have organized community-service projects, such as collecting and delivering donations for the Philpstown Food Pantry, building a drop box for old U.S. flags outside the Masonic Lodge in Nelsonville and decorating Cold Spring’s Village Hall for Christmas.

Aiden Noormae, a first-year scout with Troop 437 and a seventh grader at Haldane Middle School, recently learned how to use a map and compass while completing a scavenger hunt at the Durland Scout Reservation, the Greater Hudson Valley Council’s 1,400-acre camp in Putnam Valley.

Noormae, who lives in Cold Spring, described the outing, his first as a Boy Scout, as “good for the first 10 minutes,” before rain soaked the campsite for the rest of the weekend. But waking up to the smell of doughnuts and hot chocolate wafting through the cold, wet morning air made the trip worthwhile, he said.

Jude Morrison, who lives in Garrison, is a junior at St. Regis High School in New York City and a member of The Current’s Student Journalists Program. He is an aspiring Eagle Scout with Troop 437.

Out There

Vanishing Point

By Brian PJ Cronin

Halloween should be pushed back by four weeks: The end of October isn’t scary enough. The evenings are too bright, the weather too pleasant, the wind too still.

Now, late November — that’s scary. The sun goes down before 4:30 p.m. Because your body hasn’t adjusted to the cold, the first 34-degree evening feels like 20 below. There are no leaves on the trees or bushes to block the wind or the view.

I’ve been trying to cram in daily visits to Denning’s Point before it closes for the nesting season and the green tunnel has turned into a wide-open peninsula. You can see through to the mountains on one side and the river on the other, and anything that’s been hidden is again visible. “How long has that ruined house been there?” I asked myself for the 16th November in a row.

It’s also louder without the leaves. Last weekend I hiked with my family while a barge headed south on the river. When the water hit the shore, it was deafening, transformed into sound waves rolling across the land. I grabbed a tree. “Why is the river on the other, and anything that’s been hidden is again visible. “How long has that ruined house been there?” I asked myself for the 16th November in a row.

There is a sense of distance in November where there wasn’t before, revealing the far blue edges of the horizon that before was greens followed by yellows and oranges. One name the European settlers gave those rises to the northeast was the Blue Mountains. I can’t help but think there was another reason to call them the Blue Mountains. Those who ventured into them had an absolutely miserable time. They named many features after the devil — the Devil’s Path, the Devil’s Kitchen, etc. — and described the narrow gorges of the Catskills as “coves,” i.e., the devil’s cloven hooves. Given that reputation, the Europeans stayed at a distance and only ever saw them in blue.

There’s a section in Barry Lopez’s 2019 book Horizon, in which he discusses ways of defining the farthest thing you can see. A boundary defines the edge of where you are now. Once something happens that causes you to view that boundary as a horizon, “a world one has never known becomes an integral part of one’s new universe,” he wrote. “Memory and imagination come into play. The unknown future calls out to the present and to the remembered past, and in that moment of expansion, the imagined future seems attainable.”

What is a mountain to you? Something nearly invisible, shapeless, moving too slow to be noticed? Or something that you keep your distance from or some-thing to explore? Perhaps the most disori-enting thing about late November is when the landscape makes that choice. The barrier of trees becomes a horizon of forest that goes on much farther than you realized. There’s a slope you didn’t know about, a rock formation you’ve run by every day for months that was hidden, a stone wall stretching outward. You don’t understand your surroundings as much as you thought you did. Now what?

This is the time of year in which we’re supposed to be winding down. The darkness grows longer, we celebrate the light that remains, we throw another log on the fire and pour another mug of hot chocolate. But every time the leaves fall, it pulls me outside, despite the cold, to see what’s changed.

By Jacob Aframian

The Haldane High School football team's season ended Nov. 24 when a last-second, two-point conversion failed, leaving the Blue Devils to reflect on a hard-fought 21-20 Class D state semifinal game.

The game, played at Middletown High School in Orange County, ended a season of triumph and tragedy for Haldane, the Section I, Class D champs, who finished with an 8-3 record. The Stillwater Warriors (11-1), the Section II, Class D winners out of Saratoga County, will face Tioga in the title game on Saturday (Dec. 2). Tioga (13-0) has won the last two state championships.

The semifinal game was decided in its final minute, when Haldane quarterback Ryan Van Tassel found Evan Giachinta in the end zone for a 32-yard touchdown. With 18 seconds left and the Warriors ahead 21-20, Haldane had a decision: kick the extra point and tie the game to send it into overtime, or go for two points and the win.

The Blue Devils went for the latter, and moved almost all of their offensive linemen to the left side. The play didn't fool Stillwater, however, and Van Tassel couldn't get off a good throw.

The trick play was one that Haldane had been working on all season. "Earlier in the week, we made the decision that we were going to go for two if we were in a situation like that and we were going to play to win the football game," said Coach Ryan McConville.

When it didn't work, the Blue Devils tried a last-ditch onside kick, but it was unsuccessful. With possession of the football, Stillwater took a knee and the win.

Haldane had the ball first to start the game, and on the second offensive play, Giachinta burst through a hole and scampered 48 yards for a touchdown, giving the Blue Devils the lead 37 seconds into the game.

Once Stillwater took possession, it became apparent that the team was going to rely on the running game. With 8:04 left in the first quarter, an illegal participation penalty on the Blue Devils rescued the Warriors from a fourth-and-2. Moments later, Stillwater running back Jaxon Mueller took it in for a touchdown, giving the Warriors a 14-7 lead with 10:35 left in the half.

The Blue Devils got the ball back and 36 seconds later the game was tied, thanks to Van Tassel's 53-yard rushing touchdown. But Stillwater would keep pounding and once again was in the red zone when Mueller barreled through for a 4-yard touchdown, making the score 21-14 with three minutes left in the half.

Stillwater started the second half with the ball and used nearly the entire quarter on one drive. With 1:40 left in the third quarter, it was fourth-and-goal from the 3 and the Warriors were lining up for a field goal.

A Haldane defender jumped offside, putting the ball at the 1-yard line. Stillwater gave the ball to Mueller on the fourth-and-goal but the Blue Devils' defense held.

Haldane then started to move the ball behind Giachinta's rushing, but the drive was interrupted when a Van Tassel pass was intercepted. After trading possessions, Haldane found itself with the ball at midfield with 1:41 left in the game, but Van Tassel was again picked off on a deep throw.

Haldane had only one timeout remaining, so all Stillwater had to do was run out the clock. But on its first play, a Stillwater fumble was recovered by the Blue Devils.

The season wasn't over yet.

Under pressure with 30 seconds left, Van Tassel found Jake Thomas for a 23-yard gain. After spending the team's final timeout, he hit Giachinta in the end zone on the next play, setting up the two-point conversion attempt.
